Greetings, Dahlia Friends!

Within this list are some of the best dahlias grown. I am continually watching for better varieties to add to my list. Many of the new ones I have tried have been wonderful, while others failed to produce satisfactory results, and were destroyed. Each grower is limited as to number of dahlia varieties he can handle. Mine are contained within this list. All orders will be filled with roots that I would be satisfied to receive myself.

Named Poms have been removed from my list due to stock failure.

Dahlias like company, but not crowding. For best bloom plant large varieties 3 feet apart and Miniatures and Pom varieties 18 to 24 inches apart in rows, and in rows 3 feet apart. Never plant close to shrubs or trees, as dahlias don't like to compete for their food, and like more uniform light.

At time of planting a strong stake can be driven into ground at head of hole. Stake should extend above ground about 4 to 5 feet, for larger types, and 3 to 4 feet for small varieties.

Most dahlias take two to three weeks to sprout. Some may take longer. A whole lot depends on the weather. Don't plant earlier than two weeks before the last frost date in your area unless you are prepared to cover tender shoots on cold nights.

Orders of over $5 will receive at least 20% extras of my choice; over $10, 25%; over $15, 33-1/3%.

If some second choice dahlia varieties are allowed, in case varieties ordered are sold out, it will help to fill order to your satisfaction.

No matter how hard you work, to putter in your flower garden is a pleasing relaxation.

A FEW THINGS TO REMEMBER

Dahlias will grow in a wide range of soils and locations, but are partial to good treatment. They love moisture, but not wet feet, so be sure to plant where there is good drainage, soil of fair fertility, and at least five or six hours of sunshine, preferably morning sun. While plants are young soil should be kept well worked fairly close to plant, but after plant starts to branch cultivation should be shallow near the plant, so as not to disturb the feeder roots. Two or three times during the growing season a well balanced fertilizer may be worked in around plant, but no closer than six inches, and a little more distance from plant as they get larger. When watering soak the ground well once a week, rather than a small amount each day. Many insecticides are recommended, and I have tried most, but found one of the best to be Malathion, which is as near a complete insect killer as is on the market. Whatever you use, be sure to read directions carefully. If using DDT be sure to use some compatible spray material with it, as DDT does not kill two of our most destructive insects, Red Spider Mite and Aphid.

A new European mite appeared in some areas in 1959 and was found resistant to most of our spray materials. Would advise, if you run into this trouble to contact your County Agent for best spray material.

Flushing foliage with plenty of water pressure is very effective on control of spider mites. Mites flourish in hot, dry weather.

If soil is clay or heavy, plant about four inches deep. If soil is light or sandy, five or six inches deep would be better.

If any fertilizer is used at planting time, use such kinds as bone meal, shredded manure, compost, rotted leaves, or rotted manure. Mix well with soil in planting area. Do not let commercial fertilizers come in contact with root, but use as side dressing in later feedings. A light mulch of straw, peat moss or ground corn cob at last cultivating will help keep ground moist and cool. When mulching use a little extra fertilizer to compensate for amounts the mulch will absorb.

Although size of roots isn't too much a factor in end results of growth, I'll fill orders with best I have and save small stock for my own planting.

If you find roots shriveling before ready to plant they can be placed in shallow box and covered with lightly dampened peat moss and set in cool spot. Many people like to sprout dahlias before planting. This can be done same way by keeping the dampened peat covered roots where it is a little warmer. On late planting of many of my newer varieties I place roots in flats covered with a mixture of peat moss and soil, and set out in the open until they have nice healthy sprouts, then set in field.

Dahlias that are given a little extra care will return the favor many times over.

Dahlia Seed Growers--Growing Dahlia seeds can be lots of fun, and sometimes very profitable. No dahlia seed comes true to parent, but will give a wealth of sizes and colors. They will come double, semi-double and single, and usually show stronger growth than those from roots. To start seed treat much like marigold, zinnia or tomato seed. Start 8 weeks before you wish to plant outdoors, and when seed have set of true leaves transplant to pots or flats in cold frame. Set in garden later.
